Gobierno de Gibraltar: Ministerio de Medio Ambiente, Sostenibilidad, Cambio Climático, Patrimonio, Educación y Cultura

En el Día del Patrimonio Mundial Gibraltar se enorgullece de su Patrimonio

Gibraltar, 18 de abril de 2023

Gibraltar está orgulloso con razón de su Patrimonio y el Gobierno está igualmente orgulloso de su trayectoria en la protección y promoción de este Patrimonio, algo que ha hecho como ningún otro Gobierno antes.

En los últimos años se han producido varios hitos en la conservación del Patrimonio. El primero fue la declaración del Complejo de las Cuevas de Gorham como Patrimonio de la Humanidad, un gran acontecimiento para Gibraltar y su reputación internacional. Otro fue la aprobación de la histórica Ley de Patrimonio y Antigüedades, que mejoró sensiblemente la forma de proteger este Patrimonio. La Ley incluyó en su lista más monumentos y edificios que nunca, estableció estrictos requisitos para la concesión de licencias e instauró el Consejo del Patrimonio y Antigüedades (Heritage and Antiquities Council, HAAC). El Consejo está formado por representantes de las distintas entidades, incluidas ONG, que trabajan en y para el Patrimonio. Este se reúne periódicamente y se ha erigido como el centro de referencia para todo el trabajo en torno a Patrimonio. De hecho, la inclusión de todos los lugares de culto en el listado de la Ley ha supuesto que la Iglesia de San Andrés, que se encuentra cerrada y está en venta, no podrá ser demolida ni alterada significativamente, protegiendo así un valioso activo del Patrimonio.

Se han restaurado muchas joyas que durante mucho tiempo habían estado totalmente descuidadas y ahora forman parte de la oferta patrimonial a disposición de turistas y residentes. Entre ellos, el Pozo de la Monja (Nun's Well), que se ha saneado, restaurado y ajardinado; la Torre de la Almendra (Almond Tower) junto al Castillo Moro (Moorish Castle); el Antiguo Horno de Cal (Lime Kilm) en la parte alta del Peñón, que estaba en estado de casi abandono; la cercana Exposición "City Under Siege" (Gibraltar, una ciudad bajo asedio), que se ha renovado y relanzado; la zona de Harding's Battery, con un centro de interpretación al aire libre; y el Central Hall, que se ha restaurado y ha recuperado la dignidad que tenía como iglesia, con sus vidrieras. Además, continúan los trabajos intensivos en las Defensas del Norte y en la casa del Mount. Varios proyectos del Gobierno han sido reconocidos en los Premios al Patrimonio concedidos por la Fundación del Patrimonio de Gibraltar (Gibraltar Heritage Trust).

La promoción de nuestro Patrimonio ha despegado en el siglo XXI gracias a su presencia en Internet. El Complejo de las Cuevas de Gorham, por ejemplo, tiene 15.000 seguidores en Facebook. El Museo Nacional de Gibraltar ofrece ahora una visita virtual en línea. El Ministerio de Patrimonio ha lanzado recientemente la página web del Patrimonio de Gibraltar, repleta de información y punto de referencia para los investigadores. Esta presencia online es actualmente mucho más importante que las visitas presenciales, sobre todo porque algunos sitios del Patrimonio, como el propio complejo de Gorham, son sensibles a la afluencia de público.

Y el trabajo continúa. O'Hara's Battery está siendo sometida a un importante lavado de cara y voluntarios de Alabare estuvieron trabajando esta semana en la restauración del cañón. Los túneles de la Segunda Guerra Mundial están cerrados temporalmente por reformas, pero reabrirán antes de la temporada de verano con exposiciones mejoradas. Además, pronto se presentarán en Planificación los planes para el regreso del cañón de 9,2 pulgadas a la Batería de Levante. Además, avanzan los planes para restaurar partes del Moorish Castle con fines culturales. Y la semana pasada se declaró el primer yacimiento arqueológico oficial de Gibraltar (aparte del de Gorham) en la zona del Palacio de Arengo.

La administración del patrimonio funciona mejor que nunca, con una excelente comunicación entre los agentes, incluidos el Ministerio, el Museo y la Fundación del Patrimonio. Los promotores y contratistas que trabajan en zonas sensibles hacen ahora del Consejo del Patrimonio y Antigüedades su primer punto de contacto y colaboran para lograr proyectos que no perjudiquen —y que con frecuencia hasta mejoran— el Patrimonio.

Queda mucho por hacer, y las restricciones financieras derivadas de la pandemia han retrasado otras obras, pero el potencial sigue ahí y los planes son ambiciosos. De hecho, se está renovando el conjunto del planteamiento sobre el Patrimonio en el documento de consulta "Heritage Vision" (Visión del Patrimonio) publicado hoy.

No debemos hacernos ilusiones sobre las dificultades que entraña la gestión de nuestro patrimonio. Gibraltar tiene la bendición de contar con un patrimonio increíblemente rico. El Gobierno hace todo lo posible por apoyar y financiar su protección y promoción, pero tiene que equilibrar estos compromisos con las numerosas demandas que se le plantean desde muchos sectores diferentes.

La función primordial de los sitios patrimoniales es la protección de sus valores. Si además pueden abrirse al público, tanto mejor, pero el número de visitantes no es un indicador clave del éxito o fracaso de un enclave patrimonial. No es un simple baile de cifras. Esta filosofía se adopta en nuestro único sitio que es Patrimonio Mundial de la UNESCO, centrándose adecuadamente, en primer lugar, en los valores Educativos, Científicos y Culturales, y es precisamente la que debería aplicarse de forma generalizada a todos nuestros sitios patrimoniales.

Efectivamente, estos lugares se promocionan, y muy bien. La página de Facebook de la Cueva de Gorham, por ejemplo, tiene 15.000 seguidores y la página equivalente del Museo Nacional de Gibraltar, 6.200. La cuenta de Twitter de la Cueva de Gorham tiene 3.098 seguidores y la del Museo Nacional de Gibraltar, 2.779. La visibilidad que la Cueva de Gorham, en particular, ha recibido internacionalmente de la televisión y otros medios de comunicación ha sido de una magnitud mucho mayor que el tamaño de Gibraltar. En los últimos años, se han emitido documentales sobre la Cueva de Gorham, otras cuevas de Gibraltar y, en general, sobre los tesoros patrimoniales de Gibraltar en la BBC (incluidos dos documentales Horizon), National Geographic (televisión y revista), NHK Japan, Arte (alemán/francés), History Channel, Netflix, Curiosity Stream, Channel 4, Australian Broadcasting Service, Televisión Española y Canal Sur, así como en diversos programas de viajes. Este verano se espera la llegada a Gibraltar de varios equipos de televisión importantes. En términos de publicidad, pocos sitios patrimoniales de otras partes, en una localidad con una población de unos 30.000 habitantes, pueden presumir de semejante exposición.

Todos deberíamos estar orgullosos de tener un patrimonio tan extraordinario, que incluye un lugar con la máxima distinción. Nuestra visión del patrimonio no debe ser microscópica y basarse simplemente en el número de visitantes; no todo en la vida tiene que estar a merced de las cifras. Nuestro patrimonio tiene un enorme valor educativo, potencial de investigación y necesita ser protegido. En 2018 presenté la nueva Ley de Patrimonio y Antigüedades, un documento que había sido actualizado por última vez, por el GSLP, en 1989. Hacemos todo lo posible por proteger y, en la medida de lo posible, promover nuestro patrimonio, y tenemos la suerte de contar con un magnífico equipo de expertos mundiales, algunos de los cuales han actuado incluso como asesores de la UNESCO en el pasado. Yo mismo llevo el patrimonio en el corazón, ya que fui miembro fundador de la fundación del Patrimonio de Gibraltar en 1987.

Unámonos ahora en nuestro apoyo a uno de los logros más maravillosos del "equipo Gibraltar", del que todos deberíamos sentirnos orgullosos como comunidad.

PRESS RELEASE

No: 243/2023

Date: 18th April 2023

On World Heritage Day, and always, Gibraltar is proud of its Heritage

Gibraltar is rightfully proud of its Heritage, and the Government is equally proud of its record in protecting and promoting this Heritage, which it has done like no other Government before.

The past few years have seen several landmark events in the preservation of Heritage. The first was the declaration of the Gorham's Cave Complex as a World Heritage Site, a huge occasion for Gibraltar and its international reputation. Another was the passing of the landmark Heritage and Antiquities Act which vastly improved the way in which this Heritage is protected. The Act listed more monuments and buildings than ever in its Schedule, established strict licensing requirements, and set up the Heritage and Antiquities Council (HAAC). The Council is made up of representatives of the different entities, including NGOs, who work in and for Heritage. It meets regularly, and is now the point of reference for all Heritage work. Indeed, the including of all places of worship in the Schedule of the Act has meant that St Andrew's Church, which has closed and is up for sale, cannot be demolished or significantly altered, thus protecting the valuable Heritage asset.

There have been many heritage gems, that had long been totally neglected, that have been restored and now form part of the heritage offer that is available for tourists and residents alike.

These include the Nun's Well which has been cleaned, restored with the surrounding areas landscaped, the Almond Tower by the Moorish Castle, the Lime Kiln on the Upper Rock, which was near-derelict, the nearby City Under Siege Exhibition which has been revamped and relaunched, Harding's Battery area with an outdoor interpretation centre, and the Central Hall, which has been restored and given back the dignity that it had as a church, complete with stained glass windows. In addition, serious work continues at the Northern Defences and in the Mount. Several Government projects have been recognised in receiving Heritage Awards from the Gibraltar Heritage Trust.

Promotion of our Heritage has now taken off in the way of the 21st Century with online presence. The Gorham's Cave Complex for example has 15,000 followers on Facebook. The Gibraltar National Museum now has a virtual Tour online. The Ministry of Heritage recently launched the Gibraltar Heritage Website which is full to the brim with information and is now a point of reference to researchers. This online presence is in this day and age much more significant than physical visitors, in particular as some Heritage sites, such as Gorham's itself, are sensitive to footfall.

And the work continues. O'Hara's Battery is undergoing a major facelift, with volunteers from Alabare working this week on restoring the gun. The World War II tunnels are temporarily closed for refurbishment and will open before the summer season with improved displays, and plans will soon be filed at Planning for the return of the 9.2" Gun to Levant Battery. In addition, plans are progressing to restore parts of the Moorish Castle for cultural use. And only last week, Gibraltar's first formal Archaeological Site (other than Gorham's) was declared at the area of Arengo's Palace.

The administration of heritage is working better than ever, with excellent communication between the players, including the Ministry, the Museum and the Gibraltar Heritage Trust. Developers and contractors working in sensitive areas now make the HAAC their first point of contact and work together in order to achieve projects that are not detrimental to - and often enhance - Heritage.

There is a great deal more to do, and the financial constraints that resulted from the pandemic have delayed other work, but the potential remains and the plans are ambitious. Indeed, the whole approach to Heritage is being refreshed in the consultation 'Heritage Vision' document published today.

Reacting to a press release from the GSD criticising the Government's record, Minister for Heritage John Cortes said, "It would be comical, if it were not worrying that the GSD, and Mr Bossino in particular should be so seriously out of touch with what's happening in Gibraltar. It is a total lack of respect for all those who work in Heritage, including the Heritage Trust whose voice is heard more than ever by the Government.

"It is a real pity that on the day that Gibraltar is celebrating World Heritage Day, Mr Bossino should choose to introduce negativity with the sole aim of scoring political points. On a day when Gibraltar celebrates its greatest accolade in the field of heritage, Mr Bossino has chosen to tell the world how badly, in his limited view, the heritage environment is managed in Gibraltar. I reject Mr Bossino's analysis outright. It is a real pity that Mr Bossino, with his apparently newly found passion for heritage, was too busy to attend last night's World Heritage Day Lecture which was given to a standing room-only audience at the John Mackintosh Hall. He would have understood immediately the appetite and awareness that exists for heritage in Gibraltar. He would have also understood just how much work has been, and is being, done at our World Heritage Site and how much passion and sheer hard work is involved. He throws all this, and much more, out of the window with his uneducated message to the world."

"We should be under no illusion of the difficulties involved in the management of our heritage. Gibraltar is blessed with an incredibly rich heritage the government does its very best to support and fund its protection and promotion, but it has to balance these commitments to the many demands that are placed on it from many different sectors.

"Mr Bossino is showing his complete ignorance of heritage in his statement. He seems to confuse heritage sites with tourist attractions as though they were one and the same. The prime function of heritage sites is the protection of their values. If they can also be opened to the public, then all the better, but visitor numbers are not the key indicators of the success or otherwise of a heritage site. It is not a simple numbers game. This philosophy is adopted in our only UNESCO World Heritage Site, appropriately focusing, first and foremost, on Educational, Scientific and Cultural values, and it is precisely that which should be applied across the board to all our heritage sites."

The sites are indeed promoted, and very well. The Gorham's Cave Facebook Page, for example, has 15,000 followers and the equivalent Gibraltar National Museum page has 6,200 followers. For reference, Mr Bossino may wish to compare this figure with the GSD's own facebook page, which has 2,600 followers (17.3% of the Gorham's following). The Gorham's Cave twitter account has 3,098 followers and the Gibraltar National Museum has 2,779 followers. The exposure which Gorham's Cave in particular has received internationally from television and other media has been disproportionate to the size of Gibraltar. In recent years, documentaries featuring Gorham's Cave, other Gibraltar caves and, more widely, Gibraltar's heritage treasures have been featured by the BBC (including two Horizons), National Geographic (Television and Magazine), NHK Japan, Arte (German/French), History Channel, Netflix, Curiosity Stream, Channel 4, Australian Broadcasting Service, Television Española, and Canal Sur, as well as various travel programmes. Several major television crews are expected in Gibraltar this summer. In terms of publicity, few heritage sites anywhere, in a location with a population of around 30,000 inhabitants, can boast such exposure.

"We should all be proud of having such a special heritage which includes one with the top prize. Our view of our heritage must not be microscopic, based simply on visitor numbers – not everything in life has to be at the mercy of the numbers game. Our heritage has huge educational value, research potential and needs protection. In 2018, I introduced the new Heritage and Antiquities Act, a document that the GSD had been throwing around without much progress during its terms in power, and which had been last updated, incidentally by the GSLP, in 1989. We are doing our very best to protect and, where possible, also promote our heritage and we are blessed to have a wonderful team of world experts, some of whom have even acted as advisers to UNESCO in the past, working for us. I myself, have heritage very close to my heart, having been a founder member of the Gibraltar Heritage Trust back in 1987. So, I speak from a position of knowledge and experience – I am not a newborn pseudo-defender of heritage out of political convenience. Let us now all pull together in our support of one of "team Gibraltar's" most wonderful achievements, one we should all be proud of as a community."

"How hypocritical that they should say this now just about a month after they refused to support the National Park Act in Parliament, an Act created precisely for the purpose of improving the promotion of our Heritage. But no, they argued against it would not vote in favour. It really beggars belief.

"Given the relative numbers of Facebook followers it does look like the GSD is falling below Neanderthals in popularity. So clearly out of date!"
